

U.S. government agents want to use an obscure procedure to radically expand their use of hacking techniques. We need to stop them.

The update to "Rule 41" seeks to create a new avenue for U.S. government agents to break into our computers, take data, and use other malicious hacking techniques.

It especially targets people using privacy-protective technologies, including Tor and VPNs.

The United States Congress never approved this new expansion of powers. But now Congress is our last change to stop this change from taking effect. Read more. (anchor link to details below)

Dear Representative,

I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say.

I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say. I have something to say.

SIGN YOUR NAME
NOT IN THE U.S.?

Street

Zip Code

SPEAK OUT

Small print here about stuff you don't care about. Or something.

DAY OF ACTION: JUNE 6

On June 6, join EFF, Tor, and others in taking a stand for privacy.
We need your help. Embed this code on your site:

```
<iframe width="640" height="480" src="https://www.youtube.com/embed/HeKkSFuBbeg" frameborder="0" allowfullscreen></iframe>
```

